

The last invasion of England occurred in 1066 A.D. when William the Conqueror, Duke of Normandy, arrived in Britain from France. He brought with him the concept of feudalism, government, social orders, and the French language. Feudalism, a system that functioned as a hierarchical order of kings, nobles, knights, and peasants, became widespread throughout all of England during the Middle Ages. As families remained settled in villages over the course of generations, villages grew into towns, and a middle-class emerged with the development of merchants and artisans.
