Thomas., 2020-04-19 Recent loosening of legal restrictions on cannabis and its chemical constituents including phytocannabinoids such as 9 tetrahydrocannabinol THC and cannabidiol CBD has led to rapid proliferation and wide availability of products containing CBD Although using pure CBD does not result in THC like intoxication it is not risk free In this review we examine CBD from scientific marketing and regulatory perspectives Specifically we evaluate the evidence used to support statements concerning CBD's real and putative medical effects and discuss misleading information that has been used in marketing approaches Also we explore the current legal landscape surrounding CBD We conclude that further research is necessary to clarify legitimate therapeutic effects of CBD Federal regulation is also necessary to assure quality safety and efficacy of CBD products Until new regulations are enacted to ensure purity and label accuracy consumers should balance any perceived benefits of CBD use against potential risks associated with using products of unknown quality
