Del arraigo a la diáspora Patricia Arias, 2009 En esta obra se discuten las transformaciones socioculturales que han experimentado las sociedades y familias del campo mexicano en los últimos años. Los cambios, dice la autora, tienen que ver con seis grandes transiciones: transformación de la economía familiar campesina, el trabajo, la migración, la tenencia de la tierra, la herencia, la condición femenina y la relación campo-ciudad. Aunque cada uno de estos temas ha sufrido transiciones, cada uno ha seguido su ritmo particular. En este libro se privilegia el análisis de la situación femenina en el campo porque a lo largo de la investigación resultó evidente que los cambios en la condición femenina se han convertido en uno de los fenómenos más significativos de la vida rural en este momento. Pero en síntesis se habla de familias y grupos domésticos campesinos empobrecidos y envejecidos que han dejado de vivir de las actividades agropecuarias para depender cada vez más de subsidios y salarios tan bajos que los obligan a migrar de manera continua. Estos grupos han tenido que aprender a vivir periodos de separación prolongados o indefinidos. This book discusses the social and cultural transformations that have been experienced by groups and families in the rural Mexico in the last few years. The author suggests that the changes are related to six important transitions: changes in the rural family economy, work, migration, property of the land, inheritance, the role of women, and the relation between the rural and the urban society. Although each of these issues has changed, each has done so at a different pace. In this book we shall find that the analysis focuses mainly on the role of women as Arias found evidence throughout the investigation that changes in the condition of women have been very significant in rural life at this moment.
